If you thought it was only children who moaned, 'It's not fair!' you would be very, very wrong. Adults do it all the time as well. Horace Truss had the world's most miserable childhood with the world's most miserable parents. And now he's out for revenge! But eleven year old Lucy and the 'gang' are on to him. Who will win the battle of wits and would anyone really dare to sabotage the school production of 'Alice, through the Looking Glass' in which Lucy stars?

Whose side are you on in this outrageously funny story aimed at everyone 10 years old and over?

About the Author: After reading English at Cambridge, Gerald became a teacher, spending some years at schools in Greece before returning to Britain. He is now the Head of English at Caterham School. His interests are English folk music and song and morris dancing.

'Mister Misery' is Gerald's second book for children to be published. The first was a fantasy called 'Lord of the Silver Hand'. He has other books for adults and children just waiting to find a home in a bookshop near you.
